Who owns vantage drilling rigs?

Dubai-based Vantage Drilling has agreed to sell for $190 million in cash its two remaining shallow-water drilling rigs with its fleet now reduced to just two owned deepwater rigs. The buyer is Middle East-based ADES International, which in 2022 bought the jack-ups Emerald Driller, Sapphire Driller and Aquamarine Driller from Vantage.

What happened to vantage drilling's jackup rigs?

Last week, small offshore driller Vantage Drilling announced the sale of its remaining jackup rigs to strategic partner ADES Group. At closing, the company and ADES will enter into a three-year management agreement for the rigs.

What's going on with Vantage drilling & Ades?

At closing, Vantage Drilling and ADES will enter into a three-year management agreement for the rigs, very similar to the transaction involving the jackup rigs Emerald Driller, Sapphire Driller and Aquamarine Driller two years ago.

Who is vantage drilling?

About Vantage Drilling Vantage Drilling International is an offshore drilling contractor, with a fleet of two ultra-deepwater drillships, and two premium jackup drilling rigs.

Is vantage drilling recertifying its ultra-deepwater drillship?

Per Vantage Drilling's fleet status report, the rig is scheduled to move to a shipyard for recertification and upgrade following the sale. Another ultra-deepwater drillship from Vantage Drilling's fleet, Platinum Explorer, got its conditional letter of award (CLOA) with an undisclosed client extended by 30 days last month.

How much is vantage drilling's net asset value?

Assuming a sales price of $150 million, Vantage Drilling's net cash position would increase to almost $380 million or approximately $29 per share. However, with the company retaining a 25% stake in the proposed Tungsten Explorer joint venture and a profitable rig management business, the current net asset value ("NAV") might be above $35 per share:
